

are likely to remain unsettled, but I hope I have said enough to show that they will not be allowed to do more than occasionally harass the frontier stations of Egypt.

In conclusion, I have only to add that the Egyptian police is recruited from the army, and it again is officered by the English, and ample provision exists for preventing any internal disturbance among one of the most peaceful and least criminal populations of the world.